

REGINALD F. LEWIS MUSEUM of Maryland African American History & Culture

About the Museum

The Reginald F. Lewis Museum of Maryland African American History and Culture opened on June 25, 2005 and is named after Reginald F. Lewis (1942-1993). Born in Baltimore, Lewis was an entrepreneur and philanthropist who served as chair and chief executive officer of TLC Beatrice International, the largest U.S. company owned by an African American during his lifetime.

Mission

To be the premier experience and best resource for information and inspiration about the lives of African American Marylanders.

General Facts

The museum brings Maryland African American history and culture to life through its permanent galleries and educational programs. It also shares the broader African American experience through special exhibitions, lectures and a variety of events.

- The 82,000 square-foot facility accommodates over 13,000 square feet of permanent and temporary exhibition space, a two-story theater, resource center, museum gift shop, café, classrooms, meeting rooms, an outdoor terrace, and reception areas. Several of the museum's spaces, including the upper lobby reception area, are available for special events and meetings.
- The museum provides dynamic educational programs for both children and adults and is especially proud of its partnership with the Maryland State Department of Education. The museum's education department has developed curricula and provided teacher training to reach more than 850,000 students and 50,000 teachers.
- The museum allows for a substantial increase in the number and quality of objects collected, and encourages the study and enjoyment of collections by scholars, students, and the general public.
- The museum provides an important venue to share Maryland's African American history two blocks east of one of the state's most popular attractions, the Baltimore Inner Harbor.

Permanent Exhibition

The Reginald F. Lewis Museum has three permanent galleries on its third floor that highlight ordinary and extraordinary African American heroes in Maryland. They include:

Building Maryland, Building America explores three major types of work in which free and enslaved people of African descent engaged: work on the water, tobacco cultivation, and iron-working.

Things Hold, Lines Connect examines how African Americans nourished bonds of unity to counteract the institutions of slavery and racism.

The Strength of the Mind features stories about the creative spirit of Maryland African Americans, and focuses on their accomplishments in the arts and education.

Special Exhibitions

The museum has a special exhibition gallery on its second floor that highlights African American stories from various regions in the United States and throughout the African Diaspora.

Attendance

The museum has influenced more than 200,000 people, telling the stories of African American history, and enriching lives by being an important cultural connection for the community.
